The Constitutional Problem

Whatever position on any party front may think or say on the subject, the people of the country and especially those of Western Canada must have quite to the confusion by the time that some changes in the constitution are necessary in the light of recent decisions of the Privy Council on questions referred to them as to the validity of Canadian social and welfare legislation.

Whether on the surface the respective rights of the Federal parliament or provincial legislatures to enact legislation of this character involved in these rulings of the court of last resort, the question goes deeper than that, now that Canada has emerged from shackling clothes and has assumed status of nationhood.

It is the greatest that the people of this country should have the legal right to implement in legislation any place or policy the majority may desire to impose, there is one school of thought which contends that this right should be achieved by securing amendments to the British North America Act, allocating responsibilities and legislative jurisdiction as between the Dominion parliament and the provincial assemblies of the time of Confederation. Since that time there have not only been great changes in the condition of the country, but also in the legislative needs and aspirations of the governed as well as in the status of the Dominion in the international and Empire spheres.

Among these changes in needs and desires is a marked trend in the direction of increasing governmental administration of social and welfare legislation. The necessity for revision of authority in some form exists and that the British Parliament is not likely to stand in the way of the desire of the Canadian people for greater efficiency in shaping their own course, it is evident from the content of the London Times immediately after the Privy Council decisions were published, when the authoritative organ of British politics said:

"Now that it is definitely established how narrow are the limits restricting the authority of the Dominion Parliament, it is for the statesmen and people of this country to determine whether they are prepared to accept the agreement there must be some redistribution of powers between the Dominion and the provinces. It is not possible to do this without the aid of the Dominion to work out a new division or even with the method of amendment."

The Times also points out that "the constitution now stands the Dominion Parliament has no authority to legislate on industrial or social questions or regulate marketing in any general way, which means that the Dominion has no authority to control the Dominion's own economic life. Questions are precluded from dealing with matters of increasing gravity and urgent national importance."

As the situation now stands it appears not only desirable but imperative that that no one be left in dealing with this highly important question, and that the subject be approached by all political parties in a non-partisan way with the aim to make legislation of any type possible, provided it is properly made. There is no legal barrier to render it impossible, provided it is properly made.

The matter is of too great import to the future welfare of the country to be made the subject of political capitalization and it is imperative that the subject be approached by all political parties in a non-partisan way with a single eye to the country's needs.

As the situation now stands it appears not only desirable but imperative that that no one be left in dealing with this highly important question, and that the subject be approached by all political parties in a non-partisan way with the aim to make legislation of any type possible, provided it is properly made.

Armed Robberies

Too Many Guns In The Possession Of Criminals

A number of recent robberies in which guns have been used, prove that there is too much possession of this sort of law in Ontario.

The question that naturally arises is, "How is it that there is so much possession of this sort of law in Ontario?" The answer is, "Because of the ease with which guns can be obtained in this province." It is suggested that the government should take steps to require the registration of all weapons, and to severely restrict the sale of guns to persons who are not law-abiding.

Notwithstanding this law of course there have been a large number of crimes with guns have been used.

Whatever the cause there should be a determined effort to deprive the criminally minded classes of their weapons, as they must be conceded in the case of the "harmless" criminal.

It is a problem that requires the earnest attention of the authorities. The carrying of guns in too many cases enables the criminal to escape, and this is a factor that is not to be overlooked.

Storing Food in Russia

Soviets Are Preparing For Eventualities

Use To Be Made Of Every Available Space

The renewed war scare developing from Soviet beliefs that Germany will invade Russia has led to a new pact directed at the Soviet Union. It is intended to prepare the people in Moscow for the possibility of a long and hard winter.

Russia in general has harvested a bumper crop in 1935 and the grain and the harvest is going into storage, in storehouses and underground caverns of the country.

The Kremlin's goal is to store provisions and equipment adequate to sustain an army of 500,000 men in the field for an indefinite period. With this transport system still weak, the government is now working to get these stores into the potential danger zone.

Although Russian industry constantly increases its output of textiles, the difficulty of paying out and even cotton goods in the nation's markets constantly increases.

Now, the authorities declare that the bulk of the problem is going into the hands of the people, and that the bulk of the problem is going into the hands of the people.

Shoppers of some key foodstuffs here are expected to become apologetic. The shortage of goods is expected to be a serious one.
